

SEWING FOR A CAUSE

SUBMITTED

The Peshtigo Woman's Club has reached out to community members to help gather fabric donations for students at the Peshtigo Elementary Learning Center. Besides being an important life skill, sewing reinforces math skills for students. Elementary students have been learning to measure fabric for length and width. Students have been sewing dog bandanas, bean bags, scrunchies and lanyards. Some have been making their own patterns. Students are planning to expand the program to sew stuffed animals to donate to the police department and to make pet bandanas to donate to the animal shelter. Pictured are Kelsey Losset and Cindy Sutek of the Peshtigo Women's Club, along with Kay Sodini from the Peshtigo School District.

Question:

I've got my new hearing aids and people are still mumbling! What is going on?

A: I hear this a lot. It's frustrating to get hearing aids and then not hear clearly the way you want to! When people get glasses, a prescription is able to clear things up perfectly - for the most part. But what if the person who has trouble hearing has macular degeneration and has a big black spot in the middle of their vision. How do you clear that up? The sad fact is that no set of glasses can clear up macular degeneration. This is similar to hearing.

When someone develops hearing loss, it's generally a slow, progressive development. Sometimes, people don't even notice they have a hearing problem until someone else points it out! The problem with hearing loss is that for most people, it is a breakdown of the actual hearing organ. This leaves sound voids that the brain has to figure out. If you take out the consonants in a passage, the brain has a hard time figuring out what is going on! For example - "i-e-i- --i- -e-e -o-e

-e-i-i-e-i- -o ou-e-es -n- -e- -o-ou- -ei-o-". This makes no sense until you add the consonants! "Listening is where love begins: listening to ourselves and then to our neighbors." (Thanks Mr. Rogers!)

Even with hearing aids, there will still be sound voids. Sometimes, we can make things loud enough which will in turn make speech clearer, but not always. Hearing aids are helpers. They can't fix hearing. Sometimes people will notice a certain hearing aid will sound better than a different one, but a hearing aid can only work as well as the hearing organ will allow it. The good news is that as time goes by, with regular wearing, the brain has an easier time interpreting speech! It's important to wear your hearing aids during all waking hours (Let me repeat that...) IT'S IMPORTANT TO WEAR YOUR HEARING AIDS DURING ALL WAKING HOURS. The more you wear them, the better they get! Work with your audiologist to get the best fit for you. It will make everything better!
